	Post 80s	Non-Post 80s
Time Spent on Personal Activities	13.3 hours per week	10.4 hours per week
Percentage of Respondents Who Experience Negative Impact of Poor Work-Life Balance	83.3%	75.9%
Percentage of Respondents Who Think Flexible Work Arrangement is Important	68.1%	53.2%
Top 3 Most Desired Flexible Work Arrangement	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Flexible working time (29.5%) • Career breaks, unpaid/part-paid personal leave or sabbaticals (23.3%) • Compressed work week (20.1%) 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Flexible working time (26.8%) • Career breaks, unpaid/part-paid personal leave or sabbaticals (17.8%) • Option to work remotely/at home sometimes (13.9%)
Percentage of Respondents Who Would Consider Leaving Current Job for Better Work-Life Balance	61.5%	30.3%

Concluding Remarks

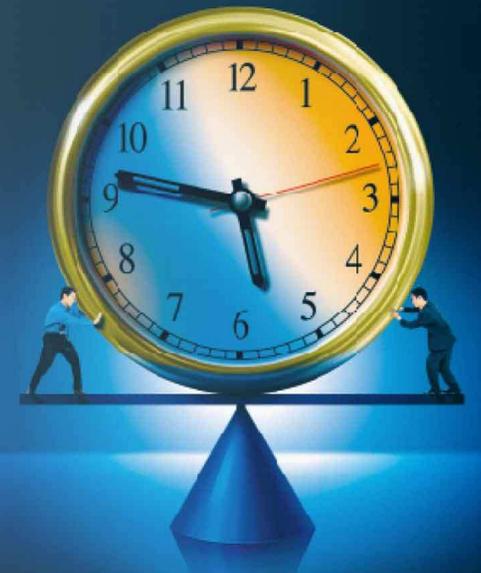

- There has been some progress with WLB in HK
 - Working hours are gradually reducing
 - More employers are offering shorter work week
- However, much more can be done in terms of providing flexible work arrangements
 - Over half of employees think this is important
 - Over one-third of them do not enjoy any flexible work arrangements
- 4 out of 10 employees would consider leaving current job for better quality of life, this is particularly true for Post 80s Employees (61.5%)
- Call for action to companies is to look at addressing – in particular introducing flexible work arrangements

A new work life quality program

A better balance between work and home...

A better quality of life for you and your family...

Work Life Quality– The Concept

- It is about having a measure of control over

Employees work to be able to enjoy an optimal quality of life

- It is enhanced when
 - an employee’s right to a fulfilled life
 - inside and outside work
 - is accepted and respected as the normto the benefit of the individual and business

Work Life Quality – The Facts

- It does not mean an equal balance
 - Scheduling equal hours for work and personal activities is unrewarding and unrealistic
- It recognizes that individual priorities vary over time
 - E.g. single person, married with children, nearing retirement
- It does mean there is no perfect one-size fits all solution
 - Different priorities and cultural differences

Key Learnings and Next Steps

- Approvals – Keep it simple!
 - Only flex time, flex place and part time require approval of manager and HR (HR generally aligns with the managers approval)
 - One Simple Thing, Carry Over Days and Days in Lieu are between the manager and employee
- Localize it!
 - Use the frame work and build on it for local conditions
- Educate Managers!
- Keep the momentum and excitement of the program going!
 - Do a “relaunch” in Q1 2011 which includes new programs and rolls in other programs
 - Flex Day Policy
 - Summer / Holiday Hours
 - Birthday Off
 - HealthRoads
 - Relaunch periodically thereafter – with or without new programs
 - Listen to the feedback from the Org Health Survey

Flexible Working

LINE MANAGER FLEXIBLE WORKING TOOLKIT

Managing performance in a Flex Working environment

- Clear performance objectives will need to be established such that the employee Working Flexibly can be evaluated based on performance results rather than face-time.
- The actual achievement against performance objectives will be the basis for performance review. Employees working flexibly need to be assessed in the same objective and fair manner as those working standard hours / working in the office.
- Working relationships and effectiveness in collaborating with colleagues must not be adversely impacted as a result of working flexibly.
- Flexible working arrangement can mean that line managers will not directly supervise employees (in the office) where they can visually monitor the work of employees. However, working flexibly does not represent less commitment to the job but rather, can result in higher productivity and efficiency.
- Line managers performance expectations should not change for employees working flexibly. Line managers should regularly monitor and discuss with the employee as to how they are performing when working flexibly. This will ensure that the employee's performance is not negatively impacted after beginning to work flexibly. Where this does occur the working flexibly arrangement may have to be withdrawn.

Line manager briefing sessions to engage “hearts and minds”

Session agenda

- Discussion to contrast mindsets and attitudes with the reality
 - "Introducing flexible ways of working will cost too much and only create a burden on our businesses."
 - "Flex won't work in HK – our people do not have a long commute"
 - "It's only for women"
- Uplift manager capabilities by providing tips and guidelines on
 - Framework on making decisions
 - Role playing response to applications
 - Managing performance

Two of my team members and myself have a work-from-home arrangement, in which we work from home one day per week. "Work from Home" was piloted in HTSA for employees working in HSBC Building Tsung Kwan O Data Centre in 2008. My team moved to TKO early last year, and given the increased commuting time, we decided to participate in the pilot exercise.

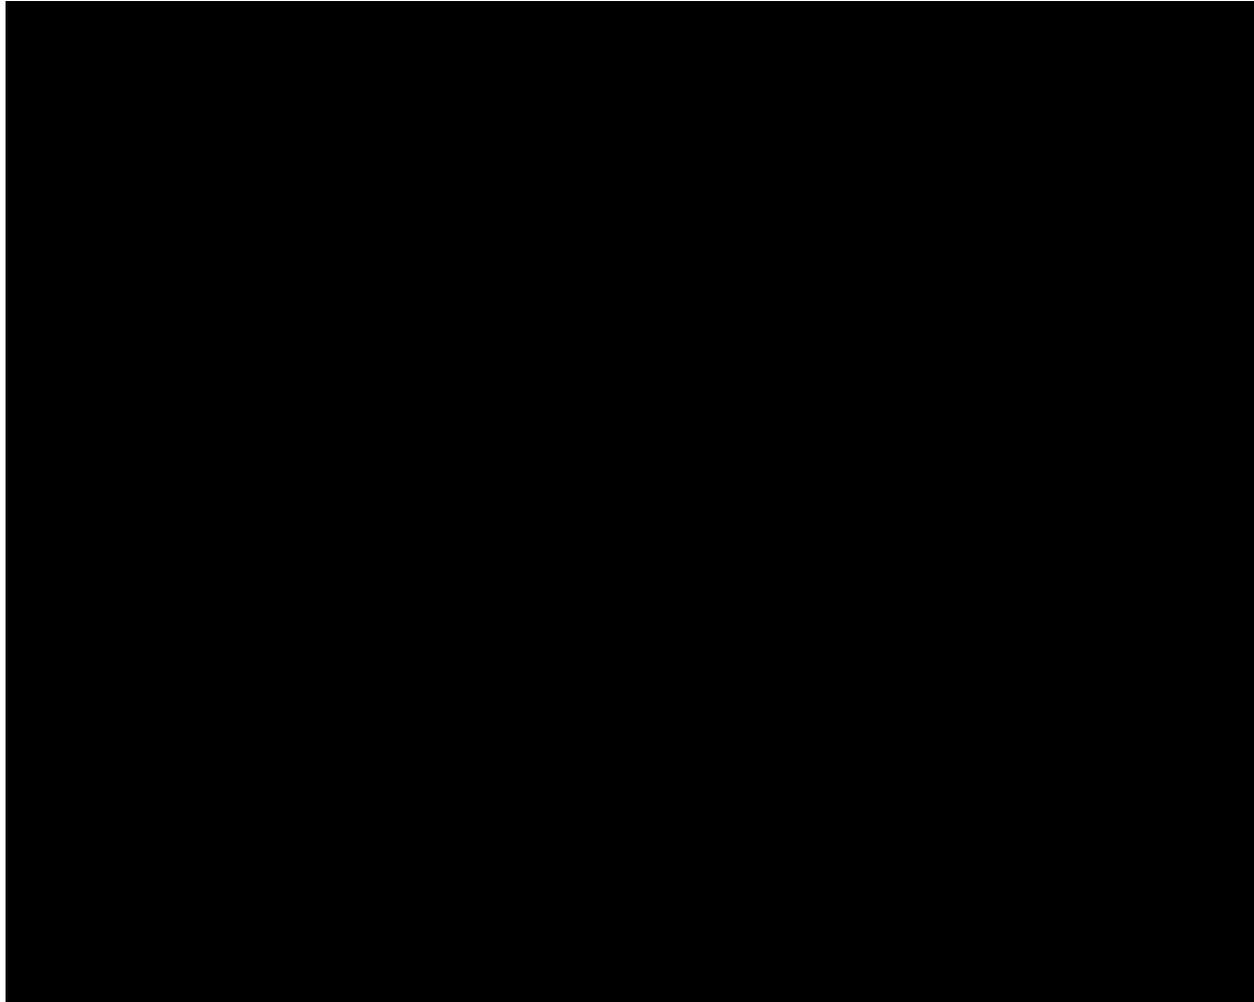

It was pretty easy and straight forward agreeing with my team on how to make the work from home arrangement work. A significant part of our role involves writing, e.g. news for the HTSA Intranet, management reports etc, which does not require a high level of interaction compared to other customer-facing roles. Nevertheless, the team is small, so I needed to ensure enough coverage in the office for any unexpected and urgent tasks. As a result, my team agreed that we should each take a different day in the week to work from home.

I think the work from home initiative certainly provides flexibility to my staff as they can save time from commuting. This extra time can be used in some other areas, such as spending more time with their families or having more rest for themselves etc. I think the arrangement enhances employee morale and engagement because when better flexibility is available, it demonstrates trust. Also, the arrangement shows that we walk the talk about focusing on the quality of the output, not the hours spent in the office.

Apart from the role and job nature, managers should also consider the personal characters of the team members as well as the level of trust and collaboration within the team. But these are nothing new in terms of management!

Celebrate successes
